EASTERN DIVISION

STEVE EHLMANN,

Plaintiff,

VS.

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF HOMELAND SECURITY,

Defendant.

Case No. 4:12 CV 1392 RWS

MEMORANDUM AND ORDER

Plaintiff Steve Ehlmann is the County Executive of St. Charles County, Missouri. He made a request to Defendant Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA)¹ seeking flood claim information, under the Freedom of Information Act, 5 U.S.C. § 552 (FOIA), about “severe repetitive-loss properties or structures in St. Charles County.” The information was produced except for the names and addresses of the properties. This information was withheld by FEMA pursuant to a FOIA exemption to disclosure. FEMA and Ehlmann have filed cross-motions for summary judgment. Because the information was covered by an exception to disclosure, I will grant FEMA’s motion for summary judgment.

Background

On January 6, 2011, Harold Ellis, an Associate St. Charles County Counselor sent a letter

¹ FEMA is an agency of Defendant United States Department of Homeland Security. Although the Department of Homeland Security is the properly named defendant I shall refer to FEMA as the defendant in this order because its action is at issue in this case.

to FEMA, on behalf of Ehlmann,² seeking copies of FEMA's lists of severe repetitive-loss properties or structures in St. Charles County - including owners, addresses and cumulative totals of claims paid for each property or structure - that FEMA has developed or maintained under in administering its National Flood Insurance Program ("NFIP") since NFIP's inception in this County.

[Doc. # 16, Def.'s Memo. in Support, Ex. A] The letter states that the purpose of the request is to enable Ehlmann to "discuss publically the history of severe repetitive loss claims in this County, including properties with especially costly claims histories and efforts to reduce those costs."

FEMA initially processed the request under the Privacy Act of 1974, 5 U.S.C. § 552(a). On March 15, 2011, FEMA sent Ellis a spreadsheet which identified Severe Repetitive Loss (SRL) information for St. Charles County, Missouri, and provided a summary of SRL properties, as well as information regarding the address reflecting the NFIP flood insurance history for each property. However, because this information was released under Routine Use K of the Privacy Act, the information could not be made public.³

Because Ehlmann wants to be able to publicly identify the owner's name and address of ² As an alternative basis for summary judgment, FEMA asserts that Ehlmann lacks standing to assert this claim because Ellis made the FOIA request and was the person communicating with FEMA in seeking fulfillment of that request. However, Ellis' letter is clearly sent on St. Charles County Government letterhead stationary indicating that Ellis is an Associate County Counselor and specifically states that Ellis is acting on "behalf of St. Charles County Executive Steve Ehlmann." Based on this undisputed evidence, I find that Ellis was acting as Ehlmann's agent and that Ehlmann has standing to bring this lawsuit.

the SRL properties in St. Charles County, he clarified his request with FEMA. On March 30, 2011, Ellis contacted FEMA asking that the request be processed as a FOIA request. Information produced under FOIA would not contain the disclosure restraints imposed by the Privacy Act. After a period of some bureaucratic wranglings and miscues FEMA began the process of gathering the requested information and reviewing the information to ensure proper disclosure. While FEMA was still in the process of gathering and reviewing the information, Ehlmann filed the present lawsuit on August 6, 2012, seeking an order directing FEMA to release the SRL information. Shortly thereafter, on September 20, 2012, FEMA issued an interim response providing Ehlmann with 45 pages of information. On October 24, 2012, FEMA issued a final FOIA response and produced some additional responsive documents. FEMA had redacted the names of the property owners, insureds and claimants, certain address information, and other property identification information pursuant to FOIA Exemption 6.

On December 13, 2012, Ehlmann filed an amended complaint seeking the disclosure of the redacted information. Both parties have moved for summary judgment in support of their respective positions.

Legal Standard

Summary judgment is appropriate if the evidence, viewed in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party, demonstrates that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Lynn v. Deaconess Medical Center, 160 F.3d 484, 486 (8th Cir. 1998)(citing Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c)). The party seeking summary judgment bears the initial responsibility of informing the court of the basis of its motion and identifying those portions of the affidavits, pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file which it believes demonstrates the absence of a genuine issue of material fact. Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 323 (1986). When such a motion is made and supported by the movant, the nonmoving party may not rest on his pleadings but must produce sufficient evidence to support the existence of the essential elements of his case on which he bears the burden of proof. Id. at 324. In resisting a properly supported motion for summary judgment, the plaintiff has an affirmative burden to designate specific facts creating a triable controversy. Crossley v. Georgia-Pacific Corp., 355 F.3d 1112, 1113 (8th Cir. 2004).

Discussion

It is undisputed that FEMA has released to Ehlmann all of the non-exempt records which are responsive to Ehlmann's FOIA request. The sole issue to be resolved is whether FEMA validly exercised its redaction of the ownership and address information of the SRL properties.

A government agency bears the burden of proof to show that it conducted a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents, produced the documents, or that it properly withheld documents or information under a FOIA exemption. Miller v. U.S. Dept. of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1383 (8th Cir. 1985). This burden of proof may be established though "affidavits of responsible agency officials so long as the affidavits are relatively detailed, nonconclusory, and submitted in good faith." Id.

FEMA has submitted affidavits which establish that the requested documents were produced and the basis for the agency's redaction of some information under FOIA Exemption 6. That section of FOIA exempts from disclosure "personnel and medical files and similar files the disclosure of which would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(6). Exemption 6 is not limited to "a narrow class of files containing only a discrete kind of personal information. Rather, the exemption was intended to cover detailed Government records on an individual which can be identified as applying to that individual. When disclosure of information which applies to a particular individual is sought from Government records, courts must determine whether release of the information would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of that person's privacy.” U. S. Dept. of State v. Washington Post Co., 456 U.S. 595, 602 (1982)(internal quotations and citations omitted). The privacy interest involved in the exemptions to disclosure belongs to the individual, not to the agency holding the information sought in a FOIA request. U.S. Dept. of Justice v. Reporters Committee For Freedom of Press, 489 U.S. 749, 764 (1989). That privacy interest encompasses not only an individual’s name but it also includes their home address. U.S. Dept. of Defense v. Federal Labor Relations Authority, 510 U.S. 487, 500 (1994). To determine whether information has been properly withheld under a FOIA exemption, a court must balance the public interest in favor of disclosure against the privacy interest Congress intended for the exemption to protect. Id. at 495. “If there is an important public interest in the disclosure of information and the invasion of privacy is not substantial, the private interest in protecting the disclosure must yield to the superior public interest.” Alirez v. NLRB, 676 F.2d 423, 426 (10th Cir. 1982). If, however, the public interest in the information is “virtually nonexistent” or “negligible,” then even a “very slight privacy interest would suffice to outweigh the relevant public interest.” FLRA, 510 U.S. at 497.

The public interest to be weighed in the balancing test is the extent that the disclosure would serve the core purpose of FOIA, which is “contributing significantly to public understanding of the operations or activities of the government.” Id. at 495. The purpose of the request is not relevant because Congress intended FOIA to give any member of the public, as well as special interests, the right to seek disclosure. Id. at 496. Rather, the relevant inquiry is whether the information sought will let citizens know “what their government is up to.”

Reporters Committee For Freedom of Press, 489 U.S. at 773.

FEMA asserts that it considers identifying information relating to NFIP policy holders to be exempt from disclosure because the privacy interest of the policy holders outweighs the public need for this information. “FEMA vigilantly safeguards information concerning disaster survivors to protect them from further trauma by way of any breach of their personal information, which could lead to identity theft or harassment.” [Doc. # 16, Def.’s Memo. in Suppt., Aff. of Booker-Kasper ¶ 8]

The owners’ names and addresses of NFIP insured structures fall within the protected privacy interest of Exemption 6. Forest Guardians v. U.S. Federal Emergency Management Agency, 410 F.3d 1214, 1218 (10th Cir. 2005). In Forest Guardians, the United States Court of Appeals for the Tenth Circuit found a request to obtain the geographic point locations for NFIP insured structures was properly denied by FEMA under Exemption 6 because that information, coupled with property records, could lead to the names and addresses of individual property owners. Id. The court noted that the plaintiff had received information from FEMA about the general location of structures covered by the NFIP. FEMA provided general information regarding which communities have a flood hazard, the general location of structures relative to the flood plains, and whether insured structures were constructed before or after a community participated in the NFIP. Id. at 1219. The court found that revealing the information that was withheld by FEMA would lead to the unwarranted disclosure of the names and addresses of the NIFP insureds. Id. at 1218. This specific information was properly withheld because revealing the names and addresses of the NIFP insureds would not provide any more information about what the government was up to. Id. at 1219.

The inquiry in the present case is whether the public interest in favor of disclosure of the names and addresses of the NIFP insureds in St. Charles County outweighs the privacy interests of those insureds. Ehlmann seeks the owners names and addresses of individual properties to enable Ehlmann “to discuss publically the history of severe repetitive loss claims in this County, including properties with especially costly claims histories and efforts to reduce those costs.” [Amend. Compl. ¶ 6] Ehlmann asserts that he is trying to create a public dialogue about whether FEMA is being a reasonable steward of tax dollars by publically addressing the claims history of specific St. Charles County properties insured under the NFIP.

In support of his position, Ehlmann cites to a decision in which the United States Court of Appeals for the Eleventh Circuit decided that the addresses of the NFIP insured structures were not exempt from disclosure under FOIA Exemption 6. News-Press v. U.S. Dept. of Homeland Security, 489 F.3d 1173, 1179 (11th Cir. 2007)(although the court held that the names of the insureds were properly withheld under Exemption 6). The ruling involved FEMA’s response after four hurricanes struck the Florida coast in a six-week period in 2004. FEMA received over 33,000 claims from residents under the NFIP. There were many reports of fraudulent claims and FEMA’s mismanagement of claims after the unprecedented damage caused by these storms. The district court found that the privacy interest of withholding the addresses of NFIP insured structures was outweighed by the public interest in FEMA’s handling of disaster assistance in Florida in the wake of the recent hurricanes. Id. at 1186. The Eleventh Circuit noted that the challenge to FEMA's withholding of the "NFIP addresses have received comparatively little attention from the parties." Id. at 1206. Based upon the sparse record before the court and FEMA's failure to "explain why being identified as someone who purchased federal flood insurance would constitute an invasion of privacy," the court found that "FEMA has failed to meet its burden and must disclose the NFIP addresses. Id.

FEMA counters that the disclosure of specific name and address information is not warranted. It asserts that the documents it provided to Ehlmann in the October 24, 2012 Final Release, gave Ehlmann the information he needs including, the specific dollar amount of payments made to each property and the property value on a specific date of loss for each property listed. This information enables Ehlmann to discuss publically the actual payments made under the NFIP and the property values of NFIP insured properties in St. Charles County.

The facts of this case are more analogous to the facts in Tenth Circuit's Forest Guardians case than they are to the Eleventh Circuit's News-Press case. The information provided to Ehlmann by FEMA allows the public to see what FEMA is doing in implementing the NFIP in St. Charles County. The disclosure of the owners' names and addresses of the specific properties addressed in FEMA's disclosure documents will not serve any substantial public interest or shed additional light on FEMA's management of the NFIP in St. Charles County. The disclosure of the names and addresses would be an unwarranted invasion of the insureds' privacy. As noted in the Forest Guardians case, revealing the addresses of the properties would, through a quick review of property records, disclose the names of the owners of the properties. The courts in Forest Guardians and in News-Press both agreed that disclosure of the insureds' names would be unwarranted. As a result, I find that FEMA validly withheld disclosure of the information at issue under FOIA Exemption 6.

Accordingly,

IT IS HEREBY ORDERED that Defendant United States Department of Homeland Security's motion for summary judgment [#15] is GRANTED.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that Plaintiff Steve Ehlmann's cross-motion for summary judgment [# 20] is DENIED.
